

Courtney McMahon School of Irish Dance

Irish dancers delight Asterix and Obelix, and their friends and foe

A marquee in the grounds of a Surrey country house was the setting for a fabulous evening of mirth and merriment in early June as the owner of an international events company hosted a party to celebrate his daughter in law's birthday. Fantastically attired as Romans, Gallic peasants and ancient druids in keeping with 'The Adventures of Asterix' theme, guests feasted on spit-roast pig, ales and fine wines.

The Courtney McMahon School of Irish Dance was booked to perform in this setting evocative of ancient Gaul. Dancers approached the marquee with some trepidation, as they had to walk past an impressive display of ceremonial flames and Roman centurions.

Once inside, dancers quickly focused on the task in hand and their dynamic hard shoe routines raised the already high spirits of the assembled guests.

Kent based musical maestro joins forces with the Courtney McMahon School

From Broadstairs in Kent, Tim Edey is widely regarded as one of the finest musicians in the world of Celtic folk music.

Tim started playing Irish folk music at the age of four on the piano followed by piano accordion at six and whistle.

A mixture of dazzling technical ability, soulful feel, musical charisma and amazing instrumental improvisation have made Tim a highly in demand session musician, both in studio and on stage.

Tim is collaborating with the Courtney McMahon School of Irish dance to stage two evenings of music, song and dance at the Mick Jagger Centre in Dartford on October the 29th and 30th.

In addition, Tim's musical agent has asked the Courtney McMahon School to perform with Tim at corporate events.

Tim loves improvising and has often been described as an Irish jizzer!

Tim's music can be sampled at www.myspace.com/timedey.
